Meet the Butterfly Whisperer of Lambton County. For 30 years, Brenda Kulon has quietly studied, photographed and protected some of southwestern Ontario's rarest and most beautiful butterflies. Kulon, a secondary school educator, wildlife photographer and natural gardener, has made it her life's work to enhance the survival of native butterflies in the Carolinian Life Zone.

Lambton Wildlife Inc. is publishing a landmark book to share Kulon's many years of experience in putting the "wild" back into our backyards. In a lavishly illustrated coffee-table book, with professional photos by herself and husband Ben, she offers simple backyard tips and interesting facts about native butterflies and how to attract them to your urban and rural spaces. Clear and concise, her writing will appeal to a broad audience of gardeners, naturalists, butterfly enthusiasts and backyard wildlife-watchers.

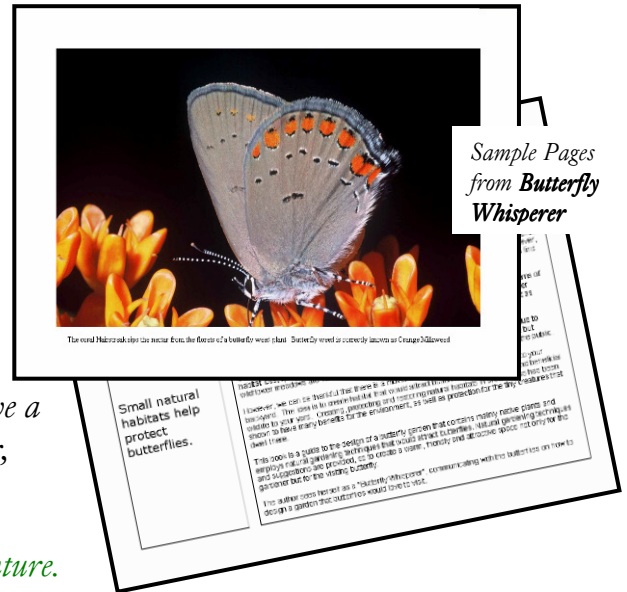

Today, more than ever, butterflies and their precious habitat are declining. Natural Gardening techniques can create a warm, friendly oasis not only for these threatened creatures, but also for the gardener.

Take part in this unique project to inspire a network of natural butterfly gardens that will help create habitat to protect and improve native butterfly populations.

Your early support will ensure this book reaches a wide audience to promote awareness and action. Use the Butterfly Protector Form to reserve an early-bird order or make a contribution. Butterfly Protectors will be recognized in the book & receive a special limited-run, hard-cover, signed Protector Edition.

This book is a non-profit venture. Join with LWI and Brenda and Ben Kulon to make a real difference for native butterflies in Carolinian Canada.

"We can be thankful that there is a movement today, to put the "wild" back into your backyard... to attract butterflies, hummingbirds and beneficial wildlife...bringing many benefits for the environment, as well as protection for the tiny creatures that dwell there." Brenda Kulon, Butterfly Whisperer
